Good Water Co. featured on Discovery Channel

Las Vegas-based Good Water Co., a reverse osmosis water filtration manufacturing company, recently was highlighted on a popular "green" show on the Discovery Channel. The company installed its PureOFlow™ whole home reverse osmosis water filtration system in two homes in California for an episode of the Discovery Channel's "Green Planet" called "Greenovate."

"The producer of 'Green Planet' selected the PureOFlow system as the best option to purify the water for both homes as they upgraded to 'green,'" said Good Water Co. CEO Tom Cartwright. "Our entire house reverse osmosis system was a perfect fit because we use no chemicals and were able to design a reusable system that allows for 100 percent usage of the water through redistribution."

The PureOFlow water purification system they installed is treating the incoming water for two homes – providing purified, safe, healthy water at every tap in the home, thus eliminating the need for bottled water, salt or under-sink filtration systems.

The show premiered on the Discovery Channel in July and was repeated several times throughout the summer. According to Cartwright, there are talks about filming a similar program for a commercial application.

"We are very excited to be on this important program and look forward to helping families and businesses in their efforts to be more environmentally conscious," said Good Water Co. President Mike Paice.

Good Water Co., headquartered at 4280 W. Reno Ave., Suite F, specializes in providing reverse osmosis water products for the entire home, as well as for businesses and restaurants. The company offers numerous products designed to fit various needs. PureOFlow, the whole house reverse osmosis water filtration system, is distributed in Las Vegas by Diamond Water.
